marry. They haven't the courage to make sacnees. They fear that under the stern demands of economy the anticipated joys of home life would never be realized. The opinion is quite general that the majority of young women of the present day who have been reared in wealthy homes, and who have been used to luxurious surroundings are know little or nothing about managing a home, or making it comfortable and attractive. They want whatever money can buy, because they have always had a full purse at their command. They shrink from assuming the burdens of a household and a family because they don't like to have their pleasures interfered with. They want rich husbands, though, if the truth were known, their parents in many instances began life on an income that would seem to them a very small amount even for pin money. Such women do not want poor men for husbands, and, as a rule, would not be content with the homes which poor men would give them. The whole of their training has been such as to

CHINA AND GLASSWARE.

From the Hotel Register. One of the most important things is to season it, and, albeit they have never crossed to the ture, so that they will remain sound after excontinent in their life, they tell you flatly that posure to sudden heat or cold. This is best done their shops are much handsomer than any in by placing the articles in cold water, which must gradually be brought to the boiling point, and then allowed to cool very slowly, taking several hours to do it. The commone the materials, the more care in this respect is required. The very best glass and china is always well seasoned, or annealed, before it is sold. If the wares properly seasoned in this way they may be washed in boiling water without fear or fracture, except in frosty weather, when, even with the best annealed wares, care must be taken not to place them suddenly in too hot water. All china that has any gilding upon it may on no account be rubbed with a cloth of any kind, but merely rinsed first in hot and afterward in cold water, and then left to drain till dry. It the filding is very dull and re-quires polishing, it may now and then be rubbed with a soft wash leather and a little dry whiting, but this operation must not be repeated more than once a year, otherwise the gold will most certainly be rubbed off and the china spoiled. When the plates, etc., are away in the china closet, pieces of paper should be placed between them to prevent scratches on the glaze or painting, as the bottom of all ware has little particles of sand adhering to it, picked up from the oven wherein it was glazed. The china closet should be in a dry situation, as a damp closet will soon tarnish the gilding of the best crockery.

In a common dinner service it is a great evil to make the plates too hot, as it invariably cracks the closest the clo cracks the glaze on the surface, if not the plate itself. We all know the result—it comes apart; "nobody broke it," "it was cracked before," or 'cracked a long time ago." The fact is, when the glaze is injured, every time the "things" are washed the water gets to the interior, swells the porous clay and makes the whole fabric rotten. In this condition they will also absorb grease, and when exposed to further heat the grease makes the dishes brown and discolored. If an old, ill-used dish be made very hot indeed, fat will be seen to exude from the minute fissures upon its surface. These latter remarks apply more particularly to common wares.

As a rule, warm water and a soft cloth are all that is required to keep glass in good condition; but water bottles and wine decanters, in order to keep them bright, must be rinsed out with a little muriatic acid (commonly sand or shot, for ashes and sand scratch the glass, and if any shot is leit in by accident it is poisonous. Richly cut glass must be cleaned and polished with a soft brush, upon which a little fine about a soft brush, upon which a little fine chalk or whiting is put; by this means the luster and brilliancy are preserved.

The first thing to be done to a garment that is to be made over is to rip it to pieces, pick out all the threads, and brush it thoroughly. If you know just how it is to be made again, select only the pieces needed, so as not to waste any unnecessary labor in cleaning what will not be used. If the material is woolen, but little worn

One reason why made-over garments so frequently have an unpleasant and botched look is because too little attention is paid to such small items. If the work must be done, it is surely worth while to do it well, so that one will feel repaid for one's labor in the end, and view the completed work with satisfaction. If the stuff is much soiled, a thorough brushing sary to their comfort and happiness. Young men therefore who earn only enough to maintain a plain, comfortable home and to live in a piain out comfortable manner hesitate to careful rinsing in clear water and still more careful drying.

Much the best plan is to use some kind of cleaning fluid, for the objections to washing are many. Some colors fade badly; even black turns rusty. The stuff must not be wrung, or even squeezed hard, to take out the water, as it will be full of wrinkles which refuse to t pressed out. It the stuff is of delicate color and s hung up to let the water drain out, it is apt to have a decidedly streaked appearance, which the most careful rinsing cannot prevent.

After brushing, the next thing is to take out all grease and other spots. Grease spots may be eradicated from black goods by rubbing with a sponge dipped in turpentine, having first laid the stuff over a woolen cloth folded three or four times. Grease spots can be taken for the stuff over a woolen cloth folded three or four times. Grease spots can be taken from material of any color by covering the place with pipe clay. Powder the clay, and moisten it with water to the consistency of thick cream, spread it over the spot, and let it dry. After it has been on several hours, scrape it off with the blunt edge of a knife, and dust off all the fine powder with a soft brush. To remove paint spots, apply turpentine until the paint is softened. Then sponge repeatedly with alcohol. Oil, wax, and resinous substances

The rubber blanket used under the stuff while sponging it must, of course, be removed before pressing.
When black stuff has become rusty, the color

When biack stuff has become rusty, the color can be restored by sponging it with strong ammonia water, or a mixture of equal parts of ammonia and alcohol which is still better.

Black stuff may be restored to its former freshness by sponging it with a liquor made by boiling a large handful of fig leaves in two quarts of water until reduced to a pint. This may be used on cloth, crape, and bombazine.

Grease spots can often be removed from silk by rubbing the fabric between the palms of the hands. Turpentine, alcohol, or benzine can be used, and pipe-clay will remove spots without injuring the most delicate shades.

Black silk can be made to look almost as good as new by sponging on the right side with weak tea or coffee, and pressing on the right side with a thick flannel between the silk and the iron. When the silk is very much wrinkled, sponge on the wrong side with weak gum-arabic water, and, when nearly dry, iron between two woolen cloths.

and, when nearly dry, iron between two woolen cloths.

Rusty black lace can be wonderfully freshened up by rinsing it in water to which have been added borax and alcohol in the proportion of one table-spoonful each of borax and alcohol to one cupful of soft water. After the lace is partly dry, dip it in water in which an old kid glove has been boiled, squeeze gently, pull out the edges, pin on sheets of blotting-paper, and dry under heavy books.

The creases can be taken out of velvet and the pile raised by drawing it across a hot iron over which a wet cloth has been spread. If there are pin marks over which the pile refuses to rise, brush it up with a stiff brush and sleam it, repeating the operation several times. Narrow velvet ribbon can be ironed by dampening the back and drawing it across the flat face of an iron set upright on a table.

When the nap is worn off of cloth it can sometimes be restored thus; soak the goods in cold water for an hour, then with a pin or needle gently pick up the nap; after the nap is raised, brush it the right way with a soft brush.

It is well to be exact, although the belief may be carried too far for the death of a young friend. A more or less poetical Hudson river railroad conductor remarked, when asked the usual question: "Her wearied spirit sank to rest at 3:45, railroad time."—these and Leather
